BY CHAS. J. H. HALCOMBE, AUTHOR OF "TALES FROM FAR CATHAY." ETG

To JAMES CANTLIE, M.A., M.B., F.R.C.S., this work is most gratefully and affectionately inscribed by the author.

CHAPTER XII. . THE WOMAN IS BLACK. Time passed pleasantly enough at Bromle The gentlenien made themselves but useful and agreeable, instituting pionies, garden parties, and riding excursions, which kept th young people in a continuous gound of morrimont. And Dora entered into the quietien, which were novel to her, with venthful zest and she look care that her home letters dwel on the happy present-the pist was generally left out; and, concerning Stone she never men tioned his name, for although there was much about him that she did not like, she considered that hitherto she had entertained opinions which to some extent seemed unfair and without sufficient foundation; and that he had thus been misrepresented to her through her own appridted and imaginative ideas And Stone spared he pains in establishing his own good reputation with the ladies, especially with Dora, for he would have gladly forfeited all other good estimates in order t have thoroughly secured hers. As it was spite of her reserve, he at times found opportunities to hover about her with such marked attention that Rose and May were wont to feel slighted and joulous, and this eventually led to unpleasantness. But everything went on placedly for some weeks. At last the trouble come. together in a shady summershoose when the her mind said foolishly-"Dora, you will not feel annoyed with me, I am suro. But, you know, I have already told

There was a demure smile about Dora's lips when she answered-"No dear, and if he bai I should have probably forgotton about it ere this, it would not be, to me, a pleasant thing to remember. But in future I hope you will endeavour to be near us when we happen to come together or engage in any conversation," "Thank you, Dorn," she said sarcastically "I do not wish to pry into any of your secrets or his either !" "What do you mean, May ?"

In introducing his measure Sir J. Westland said :- We are face to face with a defleit, all told of 3! croras, which is wholly due to the date rioration of the position caused by the fall of exchange during the last two or three years. It is hopoless to attempt to meet this position with out increasing our revenues, and Government have anxiously considered the best way in which they might sook for that increase. They ar aided in this matter by the deliberations of the Herschell Committee, who enquired into the possibilities of further texation in India, and passed in review all the sources of revenue saggosted to them, with the opinion that a r vival of the import daties is the bast means of recovery or partial recovery open to us. The legendary regiment that was said to be all colonels is almost rivalled by some regiments of the Spanish army. In the little expeditionary force ander Marshal Campos at Melilla, there are said to be no fewer than 27 generals and 70 colonels. In Spain this is not thought at all remarkable, for the commissioned officers are really not much less numerous than the noncommissioned officers and privates put together. According to a Spanish army list, the number of generals in Spain is 203, of colonels 534 lientenant colonels 962, of majors 2,014, of pap tains 5.242, of licotenante 7,576, and of sub lioutenents 9.869. This gives a total of 29,400 officers out of an army which, on the peace loot ing, numbers only 75,000 men.
